

African American Mental Health Training and Technical Assistance Program

The Intersectionality of Diversity and Trauma: Cultural Considerations

Description:

When looking through the lens of trauma, individuals may respond differently depending on his/her diversity variables, and/or the experiences from his/her background. This training focuses on having a deep discussion utilizing current literature to best approach individuals from differing backgrounds, and ways in which intervention techniques can be catered to the African American and other diverse populations. Additionally, several assessments measures will be provided to all participants in attendance, with the hope that they will be utilized to gain a better understanding of the patient/client who is being treated.

Measurable Learning Objectives:

1. The learner will be able to identify three (3) diversity variables that impact African Americans.
2. The learner will be able to list four (4) appropriate trauma assessments to use when working with diverse populations.
3. The learner will be able to apply and discuss five (5) culturally competent psychological interventions for diverse populations who have experienced trauma.
4. The learner will be able to identify (2) areas of implicit bias that effect African Americans.
